Who were the first Americans?

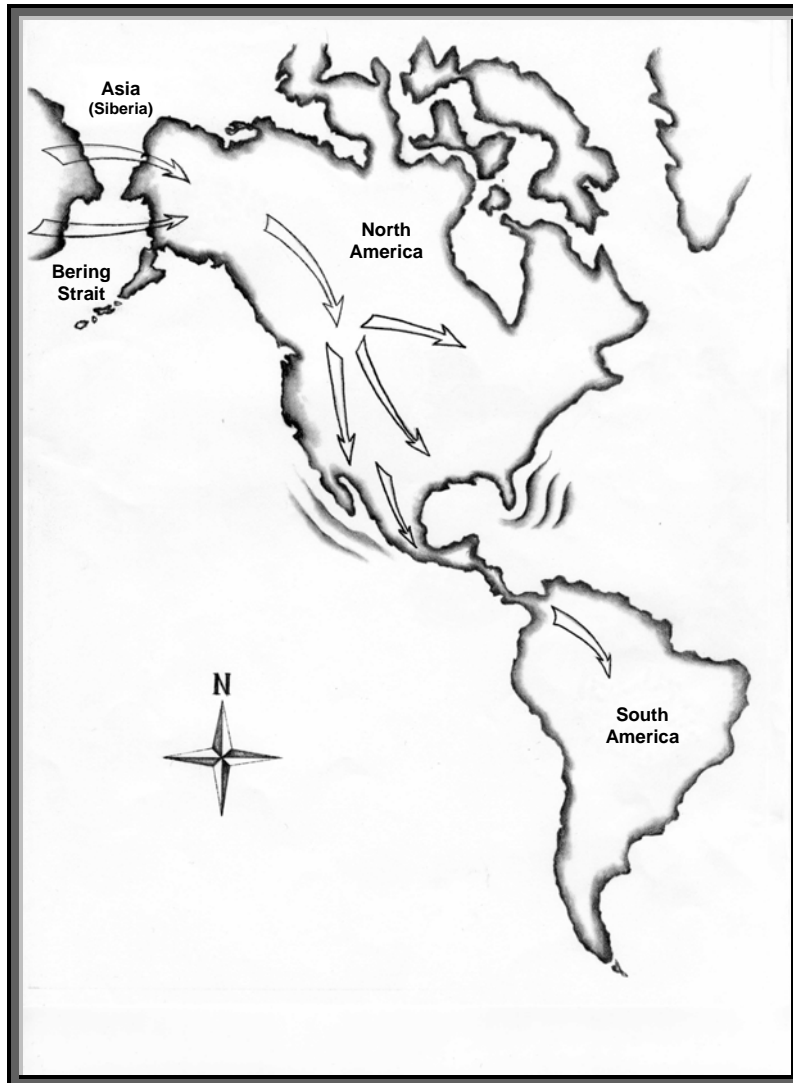

The first Americans came to North America thousands of years ago
Following migrating caribou and buffalo
They had to follow them because of what they did provide
Such as meat to eat and clothing from their hides.

How did they arrive here?

The first Americans came to the North American continent
From Asia where their lives had been previously spent.
They crossed the Bering Strait, a narrow strip of land
Traveling in small family groups carrying their belongings by hand.
As more time passed and more newcomers came here
They began to spread over North America in a manner very clear.

Where did the first Americans settle?

As more and more newcomers came to this new land
Many groups found special areas where they decided to make a stand.
Meaning they found an area that they especially liked
Where they would stay forever, which for them was only right.
Some settled in places where it was cold a lot,
While others settled where it was sunny and hot.
Some preferred life near dense woodlands,
While still others enjoyed life near surf and sand.
These areas were called regions
And it's where the newcomers lived season after season.
